Maybe the most interesting. It is through the loving lens of Hannah that the reader is gradually exposed to Zoe's full truth, and Hannah's internal struggle mirrored my own as I tangled with what is real in such a situation.

It is practical and pretty, and it's a place where nothing spontaneous happens. This is a place where nothing happens unless people sit around and have a meeting about it first. The people are mostly white, which is weird, deliberately outlandish feel as Zoe sets out to teach practical Hannah about intangible qualities such as insouciance (by sleeping in an IKEA store) and audacity (by releasing the Kermit balloon before the Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade.) But realism isn't the point of The Museum of Intangible Things.
